Margarine – frowned upon for its falsities – is integrated into nature with the utmost care, by hand, on the skin of common German trees (Birch, Norway Maple).

Ants will not go near it (said "aid"), nor bees, or any other insects living in and amongst a city forest. Not even dogs. All trees will be left at peace after coverings.

Come sunrise, the belittled flowers (Street Daisy, Lavender look-a-likes, unidentifiable other) will become a busy half-dried blobby mound swarming with ants, bees or European wasps – whoever gets there first. Picked at and gorged upon…
